(HERE GOES !!)

CURRENT HEALTHCARE FAILS TO ADDRESS THE NEEDS OF THE QUEER COMMUNITY—NOT JUST OUR GAY & LESBIAN BROTHERS AND SISTERS, BUT OUR BEAUTIFUL TRANS & INTERSEX & OMNISEXUAL SIBLINGS (AND, OF COURSE, ALL OF YOU WHO SAY FUCK THE LABELS AND FUCK DIVISIVE IDENTITY POLITICS).

TO IMPROVE EVERYONE'S QUALITY OF CARE,
WE DEMAND THAT OUR CARETAKERS...

ASK US WHICH PRONOUNS WE PREFER.

DON'T ASSUME WE'RE HETERO, OR THAT OUR PARTNERS ARE.

DON'T BASE THEIR TREATMENT ON STEREOTYPES.

REMEMBER HOW OUR NEEDS FOR SAFER SEX DIFFER.

MAKE IT COMFORTABLE FOR US TO DISCUSS OUR SEXUAL BEHAVIOURS WITHOUT JUDGEMENT.

DELIVER THE SAME QUALITY OF CARE TO ALL OF THEIR PATIENTS.

ARE AWARE OF THE PERVASIVENESS OF SEXUAL VIOLENCE AND RECOGNIZE THAT WE ALL MAY HAVE EXPERIENCED SEXUAL ASSAULT.

BE HONEST ABOUT THEIR EDUCATION LEVEL AND WORK TO INFORM THEMSELVES TO BETTER SERVE US.

BECAUSE...

IF WE'RE NOT COMFORTABLE, IF WE GET TRIGGERED, WE'RE NOT COMING BACK FOR THE CARE WE NEED.

WHEN WE DON'T GET THE PREVENTATIVE CARE & TREATMENT WE NEED, OUR DRs FAIL TO UPHOLD THEIR HIPPOCRATIC OATH.

~ A gay man's story about going to the doctor.
by Lance Heiser

Have you ever had one of those SUPER awkward experiences you'd NEVER repeat to anyone. How about one of those really awkward experiences at the doctor's office? Well, feel privileged, because I'm about to share one of those weird experiences that I've had. It's an experience that seemed to linger with me for weeks following my appointment.

I should mention now that this story is specifically meant for all those lesbians, gays, queers and trans persons out there that know what type of stories

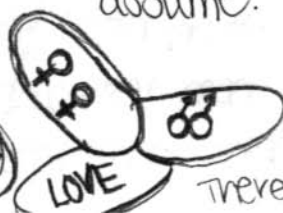

I'm talking about. So if you're a breeder, QUIT READING, this doesn't pertain to you! Okay, just kidding! We love our heterosexual inhabitants of this Earth... most of them anyways. Em, erm, Maggie Gallagher & all those close-minded members of NOM. ~~Not~~ to mention any names or anything.

So, back to the point of my story: LGBTQ community members often go through embarrassing or difficult situations at the doctor's office because of their sexual orientation. With a predominantly heterosexual society, many doctors make assumptions about their patients' sexual orientation. Remember physicians... and I hope you all would understand this on the first try considering the number of years you've all spent in school: assumptions make an Ass of You and Me. And believe me, you are making an ass of yourself if you immediately ~~that~~ a person is heterosexual... or homosexual.

You may end up offending your patients. Everyone goes to the doctor — gay and straight alike. So think before ya'll assume.

There's no curing this LOVE!

I recently had to go in for a physical for work. I always cringe at the thought of physicals. It's sooo awkward!!! They tell you to drop trou, cough a few times... and then they proceed to fondle the testicles and the shaft of the penis... checking for cancer signs, hernias, and all that jazz... needless to say, it can get a little uncomfortable!

If this isn't bad enough, how about getting a physical from a male doctor who is heterosexual, while you, as the patient, happen to be gay. Oh the possibilities for a difficult situation to spring up! Pun intended! Well, if the doctor is tall, dark and handsome — and mine definitely was — these things can sometimes happen... oops! I've yet again side-stepped the point of the story, which is this:

I went into the doctor's office for a regular check-up after I contracted bronchitis and a sinus infection while abroad. Of course my doctor asked if I had been sexually active while abroad. I told him "yes" but that I had already been checked and I was all good. Blah, blah, blah! "Don't drink," "Don't smoke"... then came the "protection" talk. The doctor says to me: "I want to make sure you're using protection since you are sexually active. I would hate to see you get a girl pregnant or contract an STD from a woman

HOLD IT... did he see me walk in? Did he see the tight pants? Hear the high-pitched voice? Did he just assume that I was straight?

First of all, this has never happened before in my life. I mean, it's just so obvious, isn't it? Needless to say, things got Awkwardward!!!

I responded, quite sassily I might add, "Oh, I don't think I'll need to be wary of getting a girl pregnant any time soon." I still don't think he ever took the hint. He scampered on his way and I've never been back since.

I wasn't mad at him. I was just a little taken aback that he automatically spoke to me as if I were a heterosexual... he made an assumption, something that physicians in particular shouldn't do.

Awkward physicals and medical checkups are common for the LGBTQ community. Many find that they have to divulge their private information to a complete stranger in order to get the correct diagnosis or whatever... We go through these issues as members of the "queer" community. It's nice to know there are others out there dealing with these awkward situations. I guess next time I should just wear a rainbow tie to my appointment that way it's right out in the open from the get-go. Doctors should have practices that make people feel safe and comfortable.

I guess I'll go to a different doctor next time... which I did. I'm sure he'll be seeing a lot more gay men coming to his practice. By the way... he's gay, fabulous, cute... and did I mention he's a doctor?
hmm ni

Not quite the Dr.'s Office

But still awkward none the less.

It's funny because random situations just like this one could happen in the least-expected places. It has become a daily chore to deal with awkward straight men to women. Keep your eyes open... breeders have been spotted all over... from the market place, library, + craft store, to adult milk + porn stores!

TRIGGERS

HEY PLANNED PARENTHOOD! Next time I go in for an exam, can you tell your nurse to be more polite. She didn't even tell me her NAME before she jammed a speculum into my body. DON'T TELL ME TO RELAX. I DON'T KNOW YOU. You do the same thing every time, don't you? How many women have you triggered with your brutal bedside manner? Don't choke yourself with the idea that clinic workers need to be clinical. After my exam, after I was shuffled out the door, I skulked to the bike rack & spent a long time just breathing. Just listening to my body to make sure I was okay. Yeah, I could cope with the feeling that I had been violated. I've felt it before. Had I not been okay, I would've walked my bike home and called the Sexual Assault Support Services hotline. Knowing SASS will be there helps me get through the day →

→ Sometimes, even though I've never called. Knowing somebody's always there makes a huge difference in not feeling so ALONE. You know what else helps? Knowing that I have rights and that I deserve healthcare that fits me, the messy combo of identities that I carry: queer, femme, a survivor of sexual assault, a ciswoman. I'm looking forward to the day that I don't get a furrowed brow from the nurse when I tell her that I came in because I fucked a girl who happened to call me AFTER to tell me she had Chlamydia. That's why I'm here, no-name nurse. No, it wasn't some round of drunk Collegiate experimentation. I'm queer all of the time. Maybe you could have tucked some dental dams into my "safer" sex goody bag. Next time, I'm calling you out on your heterosexist bullshit. 'CAUSE IF I DON'T, WHO WILL???
